BE A COUPON CLIPPER PIERPONT MORGAN IS

Coupon Clipping Means Dividends in This Race for the $2,500.00 in Prizes The Dispatch is Offering to the Ladies of the Northland.

The votes are piling in from all sections of the Northland and shows that the candidates are alive to the fact that now is the time to get into the race. Many of the readers of the Brainerd Dispatch have their favorite and you can rest assured that not a day passes without their showing their interest by sending or bringing in votes to cast for her.

Have you picked a favorite? If not, do so at once, and back her up with your votes and subscriptions and don't you forget for one moment that the ladies will not appreciate it. Pick your colors and stand back of them.

THE REAL DIVIDEND PAYER

While coupons count votes and are dividend payers in a small way. To be a real, live coupon-clipper in this contest, you must get vote certificates; they are the real dividends that tell the tale in the final count that makes the winners. Make up your mind to win, let your friends know of this purpose keep them in mind of it and the outcome is certain to be right.

NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

Have you identified yourself with the Brainerd Dispatch's $2500.00 contest yet? If you haven't, how do you expect to grab off any of the prizes? Nothing is to be gained by procrastination, procrastination being nothing but a thief of time. Wake up! Get a move on yourself; get on the "band wagon" and join the procession. Send in your name and get busy gathering your votes. You may imagine it is too late to enter the race and become the winner of the automobile. That's where you are mistaken—there is as good a chance today to enter the race and win as there ever was.

Do not loose any more valuable time. You are losing votes with it, and votes mean a prize. Summon all your energy and ambition together and strive to win one of these prizes. There are $2,500.00 worth, and you can have one of them if you get enough votes. The prizes are here. Do you want any of them? If so, send in your name and get busy.

Thirty-odd years ago, the government of the United States sent Gen. Hazen, then chief of the signal corps, and a small staff of army officers across the Mississippi river to spy out the country that is now known as Northern Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and eastern Montana. They went, and when they came back their reports concisely summed up were "A great alkali desert that is fit only for Indians and buffalo." Today this same desert is the home of many thousands of people and yields many million bushels of grain. How was it done? By the unceasing, unrelenting, untiring industry of the early pioneer.

Take this lesson to heart; it is a good one, and if you desire success do not let your efforts relax. You will have, just as the Dakota pioneer did, all sorts of difficulties. The pioneer had the blizzards in the winter, cyclones and draughts in the summer with a few grasshoppers mixed in, but grit and energy finally overcame these difficulties until today he has made this region the paradise of the middle west. Your case is not so hard when you come to size it up. But to get votes requires a few of the same qualities that enabled the pioneers of the Dakotas to subdue the desert.

VOTES POUR IN

The votes continue to come in and the trouble thickens. The thicker it becomes the more energy you will need. Be animated with the spirit that enabled Napoleon's old guard to answer, when called upon to retreat, "The guard dies, but never retreats."

THE GRAND PRIZE

The $100.00 Twin Diamond Ring that The Dispatch is giving as the GRAND PRIZE in this contest is one of the handsomest and most beautiful diamond rings that has ever been on display in Brainerd. Its effervescent flashes of blue, white, red and gold are as beautiful and hard to describe as an Alpine sunset in Switzerland. There is nothing so highly prized or whose intrinsic values is greater than beautiful diamonds, the most priceless gem the earth produces. This beautiful ring is on display in the window of E. S. Houghton, the well known jeweler of whom it was purchased and he backs it up with his guarantee.

$60.00 YEARLY PRIZE

It is possible in this Mammoth race for prizes aggregating in value over $2500 for one candidate to win two prizes, that is, the MAMMOTH, CAPITAL, GRAND or DISTRICT PRIZES and the $60.00 bedroom suite the $2500, for one candidate to win two It is possible to do it this way—by securing enough votes to win any of the foregoing prizes and at the same time secure the largest number of yearly subscriptions. This is what makes it possible to win two awards. This bedroom suite is made of the finest Birdseye Maple and consists of a chiffonier, dressing table and bed, selected by and purchased of D. M. Clark & Co. Mr. Clark considers it the best all-round value in a suite of this kind he has in stock. A bedroom suite of the character and rich finish of the one, The Dispatch is giving away as the yearly prize is a treasurer that is both useful and beautiful, and with ordinary care will last any indivdual a life time.

THE MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIP

The essential need of a musical education as one of the requirements of a lady's education today is beyond dispute. It has become an established fact that no lady's social training and education is complete without some knowledge of music.

The Dispatch is offering you a spendid chace to procure your long splendid chance to procure your long elementary step or put the finishing touches to your musical career.

This scholarship will entitle the winner of it to sixty lessons on the piano under the direction of Prof. Bartsch, one of the most accomplished and talented musicians of the Northland.

This is the opportunity of a lifetime. Avail yourself of it before it is too late. Do not wait for tomorrow's sun to rise before starting out to gather in the votes.

(Concluded on page six)

Why isn't this a dandy car? I never thought it run so easy; its a perfect dear, isn't it? That's the comment one lady made on the "White Streak," the Buick car The Dispatch is giving as the Mammoth Prize in this battle of votes.

They scoffed at Napolean and laughed him out of school, yet the very men who scorned his company and mocked him as a block-head, worshipped the very ground he walked on in later years. Don't let those who call themselves your friends jeer and scorn you out of the race for votes that has not as yet fairly begun

There are many who will say to you, "I wouldn't do anything like that." Do you know the reason why? Because ninty-nine times out of a hundred these very people couldn't do it if they were a mind to. They are parasites, non-producers—that's why, and that is the reason why they say what they say and do as they do.

FLOUR AT NEW ORLEANS

Subjected to Weevil Contamination in Short Time.

Washington, May 16.—"Flour lying any length of time in New Orleans is subjected to weevil contamination," charges Special Agent John M. Turner of the department of commerce and labor in a report on the Latin-American flour trade, just sent to congress.

"Much cotton is shipped from that port and the docks and warehouses become infested with the eggs of more kinds of weevils than millers generally know are in existence," says Mr. Turner. He cites a case carried before the Porto Rican health officers and the governor and says:

"It was proved by one importer that ever since flour had been imported weevil contamination was known and it had existed in rye, corn and other cereals coming from the United States. Flour shipped from Minnesota will develop a crop of weevils six weeks after it lands on the tropical island of Porto Rico."

Acquitted of Ancient Crime.

J. W. VAN CLEAVE.

Dies at His Home in St. Louis of Heart Disease.

JAMES W. VAN CLEAVE DEAD

Formerly Was President of National Manufacturers' Association.

St. Louis, May 16.—J. W. Van Cleave, former president of the National Manufacturers' association, died of heart disease at his home here.

His death was a shock to his relatives and friends, who had been hopeful of his recovery for the past ten days, during which he had shown marked improvement.

Mr. Van Cleave was nearly sixty-one years old. Until six months ago he was in robust health. H. C. Thompson, for thirty years his business associate, said Mr. Van Cleave's breakdown could be traced to his war with the labor unions.

When the Buck Stove and Range company, of which he was president, was boycotted, following a dispute with a local union, he obtained an injunction against Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; John Mitchell, formerly president of the United Mine Workers of America, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor.

The injunction was ignored, and the three labor officials were sentenced to jail for contempt of the federal court of the District of Columbia. An appellate court sustained the sentence, and an appeal was then taken to the supreme court of the United States, where the case is pending.

TWO MEN KILLED IN TRAIN WRECK

Brakeman and Fireman Meet Death in Accident.

Sandstone, Minn., May 16.—While running twenty-five miles an hour the Northern Pacific fast freight for Duluth from the Twin Cities was wrecked, probably by hitting an open switch, at Finlayson, Minn. The engine was overturned, killing W. E. Young of St. Paul, head brakeman, and Frank St. Johns of Duluth, fireman.

Michael Lynch of St. Paul, engineer of the train, was severely injured.

When the engine left the track nine of the box cars telescoped it and, as the cars were loaded with inflammable merchandise, they soon caught fire, reducing the bodies of the two unfortunate men to ashes.

Lynch, the engineer, had a miraculous escape. When the engine struck the switch he jumped through the window of the cab and managed to escape with only comparatively slight injuries, caused by escaping steam.

Young was braking on the head of the train and was sitting with the fireman in the cab when the engine struck the switch. He and the fireman were caught in the head of smashed cars and crushed to death. The fire department at Finlayson was soon at the scene of the wreck and fought the fire for eight hours.

A wrecking crew was sent immediately from Duluth and soon had the track cleared.

The train was made up of cars of merchandise, canned goods, oats and tar felt. This latter, from its inflammable character, made the work of subduing the flames more difficult. Hundreds of people from Duluth and the surrounding country watched the progress of the firemen and wrecking crews all day.

The train was in charge of Conductor Bailey. He was not injured. Several officials of the Northern Pacific left Duluth for the wreck to make an investigation. They have not yet placed the blame.

Child Fatally Burned.

Beaver Dam, Wis., May 16.—Mary Kryzinski, four-year-old daughter of Josept Kryzinski, died from burns received about her face, arms and chest while playing with matches. Neighbors tried to rescue her from the flames, but a vicious dog drove them away.

Four Italians Cremated.

New York, May 16.—When firemen were inspecting the ruins of a double tenement which was swept by fire in Brooklyn they came upon four burned bodies in a room on the top floor. The victims were Italians.

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT TAFT

Explains His Action in Case of Louis R. Glavis.

WRITES TO SENATOR NELSON

Chief Executive Frankly Admits That He Requested Assistant Attorney General Lawler of the Interior Department to Write and Prepare an Opinion as if He Were President. Admits Wickersham's Analysis Was Dated Prior to Date of His Decision.

Washington, May 16.—President Taft has issued a statement in the form of a letter to Senator Nelson, chairman of the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee, explaining in detail his action in considering the evidence on the Glavis charges against Secretary Ballinger and how his decision was reached and prepared.

In it he admits frankly that he requested Assistant Attorney General Lawler of the interior department to write and "prepare an opinion as if he were president," and with equal frankness admits that Attorney General Wickersham's analysis of the evidence in the case was dated prior to the date of his decision, "so as to show that my decision was fortified by his summary of the evidence and his conclusions therefrom."

No explanation is offered by the president, however, as to why the Lawler brief was not transmitted by him to the senate as one of the documents considered by him in connection with the case and the present whereabouts of the original copy of the Lawler brief remains a mystery.

Lawler informed the congressional committee that he delivered the original to Mr. Wickersham. The latter stated to the committee by letter that he had received the document from Lawler, had taken it to the president, had later received it from the president and it had remained since among the papers in his office. However, the document sent to the committee by Mr. Wickersham was not the original, but was obviously a carbon copy.

Confirms Kerby's Statement.

The statement issued by President Taft virtually confirms the statement made by Frederick M. Kerby, a stenographer in Br. Ballinger's office, that the brief prepared by Lawler was in reality a letter written for the president's signature.

Mr. Wickersham, the secretary of war, and Secreary Nabel were in conference with the president during the preparation of the statement.

It is the general comment in Washington that had a statement similar to the one just issued been given out by the president a few weeks ago the molehill would never have grown to a mountain, nor would there have been any occasion for the president of the United States to issue a statement of 1,000 words in answer to charges made by an humble stenographer.

In discussing the Lawler letter, Mr. Kerby said the "I" used therein was undoubtedly meant to refer to the president, and the word "you" could, from the context, only refer to Secretary Ballinger.

When the facts in the possession of Stenographer Kerby first leaked out a statement from him was sought for the press, but after consultation with his wife he decided to say nothing until he was summoned to the witness stand. The action of the investigating committee in declining to permit any evidence bearing upon the president's letter shut off Kerby. He then resolved to make a public statement of what transpired.

It is understood that Kerby will not be discharged from the interior department, but will be transferred to another bureau. He will also be called to the stand, but it will probably be a week or ten days before he testifies.

HOVERING NEAR WILKINSON

Forest Fires Threaten a Minnesota Town.

Walker, Minn., May 16.—The flames which imperiled the Minnesota state tuberculosis sanatarium, three miles south of here, and this city, have been put under control, but a part of the fire swept on westward and is now hovering over Wilkinson, Minn., six miles from here.

The village is depopulated, except for a few women, who are protecting their homes from flying brands, the rest of the citizens being at the fire front, which is almost half a mile from that village.

At last reports a slight drizzle of rain was falling and aiding the fire fighters.

Gas Explosion Fatal.

New York, May 16.—Escaping gas, which had collected behind the marble facing of the arcade walls in the Mutual Life Insurance building, in the center of the financial district, exploded with terrific force, causing the death of one man and throwing the tenants into a panic.

Detective Guilty of Murder.

New York, May 16.—Maurice Lustig, a former private detective, was found guilty of murder here. The state contended that he poisoned his wife, Rhoda, with strychnine last October. She carried $3,000 life insurance and Lustig was, it is said, in love with another woman.

PROFESSOR JUDSON.

Does Not Consider the Present Age Decadent.

PRESENT AGE NOT DECADENT

But Professor Judson Says Society Needs Impulse of Moral Motive.

Chicago, May 16.—Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago, does not consider the present age decadent, although newspaper reports of his address before the Northern Baptist association attribute this view to him. Since then he has been subjected to inquiries and comments from various parts of the country. He issued a statement to set himself right. What he really did say was this:

"In my judgment there never was a time when society so greatly needed the impulse of a moral motive as today. The whole condition of modern life is alarming. It reminds one of the character of Roman society during its decadence and before the dissolution of the empire at the hands of the barbarians, of the character of French society preceding the French revolution."

In his address Dr. Judson recognized four sources of evil active in the world of today, the first being war. Of the others he mentioned:

"Another source of endless evil is dishonesty, permeating public and private life alike.

"Another vital source of infinite evil is drunkenness.

"A fourth source of infinite evil in every modern society is impurity of word and act."

This indictment, according to Dr. Judson's statement, while reminiscent of decadence, does not constitute the decadence of Rome and France at the periods before alluded to.

WOMAN SHOOTS HER HUSBAND

Kills Him After Quarrel Over a Skirt.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., May 16.—Mrs. Anna Sunderland shot her husband, Alsworth J. Sunderland, with a 32-caliber revolver. The bullet penetrated the right lung and he died in five minutes. The murder occurred after a quarrel and fight between the couple over a $10 skirt that she had purchased at a department store in this city. The husband had purchased the skirt under protest following the drawing of his month's wages from the Chippewa Lumber and Boom company, by which he long had been employed.

Both visited the store, selected the skirt and left it to be altered. Several times during the evening remarks had passed between the couple over the skirt purchase. They entertained company till 11 o'clock at their home, and the husband took some of the guests to their homes. Returning, Mr. and Mrs. Sunderland went upstairs to retire. He was undressed when the quarrel was renewed. It is alleged that he accused her of relations with other men. He struck her several times, blackened both eyes and cut her face.

She had always kept a revolver, and, going to an adjoining room, she got the gun and fired the fatal shot. She hurriedly left the house and went to a clothing store, where she had Dr. H. H. Hurd summoned quickly, and then went to the house of her sister, Mrs. T. H. Connors, exclaiming, "I did it."

When Dr. Hurd reached the Sunderland house he found the victim had made his way downstairs, and, crouched in kneeling position, had died with his face on the floor in a pool of blood beside a couch, which he had tried to reach.

Meanwhile Mrs. Sunderland, aided by her sister, fled out of the city, and, securing a rig from a farmer, started for the timbered sections of this county. It is reported that she is thirty miles away.

The couple were forty years of age and have four children between four and ten years old.

Letter Boxes In France.

The modern French letter box has the shape of a pillar, profusely ornamented with the conventional lily. The whole box or stand is fashioned after a plant, and the top resembles a bird. The body is surrounded by floral wreaths or festoons, and the base is formed by large leaves. The boxes are placed against buildings and have a very pretty effect.

FIRE THREATENS MINNESOTA CITY

CONFERENCE AT WHITE HOUSE

Discusses Plan to Reunite Republican Factions.

WESTERN MEN IN ATTENDANCE

Take a Leading Part in the Discussion and Express the Opinion That the Differences Between the Insurgents and the Regulars Are Not Irreconcilable — President Taft Appears Satisfied.

Washington, May 16.—Whether it is feasible at this late day to try to wipe out Republican factional lines and meet on some common ground that would unite the insurgents and regulars in congress is the question of greatest moment now agitating the minds of Republican leaders. It was raised at a conference at the White House.

A great many things were talked over at the gathering and a revised legislative programme was made up tentatively, which it was believed would command the votes of practically all of the regular Republicans. After that had been accomplished a discussion followed as to the possibility of making certain concessions which might attract all of the Republicans of the senate.

Practically all the Republican senators from the West were present except the most radical progressives, namely, Senators La Follette, Beveridge, Cummins, Dolliver, Bristow and Clapp. Among the progressives who attended were Senators Nelson, Borah, Brown, Burkett, Dixon, Gamble and Crawford. These men took a leading part in the discussion and expressed the opinion that the differences between the insurgents and regulars were not irreconcilable.

The sudden amalgamation of insurgents and regulars of the senate last Friday, which resulted in the adoption of an amendment to the administration railroad bill on the subject of long and short hauls, appeared to have made the regulars more tolerant of progressive views on the pending measure.

Democrats Formed Solid Front.

The "getting together" was necessitated by the discovery that the Democrats of the senate had formed a solid front to secure the adoption of a Democratic provision relating to long and short hauls, which was to have been put in motion after they had voted with the regular Republicans to defeat the Dixon amendment favored by the insurgents.

It would be difficult to decide whether the regulars or the insurgents were the more surprised when they learned the plans of the Democrats. A vote had been ordered, under the unanimous consent agreement, and there was little time for thought. Senator Aldrich advised his clients that it was time for the Republicans to get together. The insurgents, after learning the situation, acquiesced and both factions acted accordingly.

Neither Republican faction get exactly what it wanted, but it demonstrated the fact that the Republicans could "unite against a common enemy." At the White House there was some comment on this fact, and it was argued that if this could be done in relation to the long and short haul amendment to the railroad bill the case was not hopeless as applied to other measures on the administrative legislation programme.

When the senate meets to resume consideration of the railroad bill it is expected there will be a number of informal conferences. Senators Borah, Nelson, Dixon and others, who have voted with and against the older Republican leaders of the senate, are expected to act as the intermediaries where "go betweens" appear to be necessary. It would not be surprising if some agreement would be reached during the present week for the fixing of a date to take a vote on the railroad bill.

President Taft appeared satisfied with the prospects for his programme.

EXPLOSION KILLS THREE

Several Other Persons Sustain Serious Injuries.

Pittsburg, May 16.—A battery of five boilers exploded at the plant of the Diamond Coal and Coke company at Chewtown, killing three men.

Six others, who were in the boiler house, and residents of the dozen or more houses nearby were injured.

The dead are: William Adamson, electrical engineer; Peter Walsh, Earl Bovard. All three leave widows and one or more children.

The cause of the explosion is unknown and it is doubtful if responsibility can be placed. The force of the explosion shook some of the houses from their foundations.

Newspaper Burned Out.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 16.—The office of the Niagara Falls Gazette was destroyed by fire. The plant and equipment was valued at $100,000, the loss being about half that amount.

Bemidji Is in Great Danger of Being Destroyed.

TROOPS SENT TO THE SCENE

Governor Eberhart Orders Militiamen to Assist Residents of Imperilled Town in Fighting the Fire—Women and Children Pray for Rain—Hundreds of Men Battle With the Flames.

Bemidji, Minn., May 16.—Women and children are praying in the churches of Bemidji for rain, or some other act of nature, to save them, their husbands and fathers and their homes from impending catastrophe.

Although fought desperately for hours by hundreds of citizens, soldiers and forest rangers a forest fire, four miles wide, has been slowly nearing Bemidji from the south.

After 1,000 volunteer fire fighters had gathered for a last desperate stand at the big state road, which runs across the face of the flames, a few drops of rain fell from an apparently cloudless sky, and hope fills the breasts of the men.

The big lumber yards of the Shevlin and Weyerhaeuser companies, located on the southern outskirts of town, are still, however, a source of imminent peril, and the big piles of timbers there are being guarded by both day night crews of the mills, which have stopped work, and scores of terror-stricken citizens. Firebrands, the size of flaming sticks, drop in hardly visible myraids, hissing through the dense and almost suffocating smoke. The lumber and surrounding forest have been wet down, but some small fires have been discovered just in time to save the yards.

As the yards immediately adjoin the many frame houses in which mill employes live, the business and other resident districts of the city, through these highly inflammable trains, have been in continual danger.

Appealed to the Governor.

At noon citizens were convoked at a public meeting and Governor Adolph O. Eberhart was telegraphed information of the peril of the city and a request for help. The governor immediately replied, authorizing State Forestry Commissioner C. C. Andrews of St. Paul, who has arrived here, to direct the Minnesota national guard in the northern part of the state to do what he saw fit to save the city.

Mr. Andrews communicated with Lieutenant Colonel Reiche of the Minnesota national guard at Duluth and a company was put aboard a train there bound for Bemidji. The militia company at Crookston was ordered to be in readiness to come to Bemidji and it is believed it is already on the way.

The fire originated about seven miles south of Bemidji. The source of the fire in dried up swamps has been carefully watched by state forest rangers for several days, incipient blazes having arisen and been checked there. The fire, however, had been smoldering in the woody soils of the muskeg and cedar swamps, working outward unseen in all directions.

The first note of alarm reached Bemidji from Chief Fire Warden Clarence Shannon of the affected district. He called for volunteers. Several wagonloads of blankets and 125 men were rushed to the scene.

The fire had flared up from the soil in many quarters and within two hours the woods for miles were a sea of flames, whipped into racing fury by high winds from the south. The forest rangers rapidly retreated to save their lives. When this information reached Bemidji shortly after noon 500 more men were rushed to the scene. Notwithstanding their most desperate efforts they were driven back four miles before 6 o'clock and the blazing woods had widened into a flaming and ominous wall of fire five miles across.

Concentrated for Last Stand.

Chief Shannon retreated another half mile and drew up about 1,200 volunteer fire fighters on the big state road which runs from this city south through the heart of this unpopulated forest. Here blankets and other means of fighting the flames were concentrated for the last stand.

The smoke rolled through the city, filling homes and churches, so that at times in the latter the pulpit could not been seen from the rear of the auditorium, and people groped about almost panic stricken through the murky streets. The residents of the poorer districts were distracted. The firebrands commenced bombarding the roofs of houses in the city and great fears are entertained that flames may break out and touch off a general conflagration.

The fire was temporarily checked at the big state road, although a part of the forest west of the city is now blazing and threatening the homes of several farmers.

With the force of fire fighters at hand it is believed the flames can be stayed until rain comes.

Help from neighboring towns has begun to pour into the city and 3,000 volunteers from as far east as Duluth will be available.

NEW FIELD FOR INSURGENCY.

F. O. Lowden's Son Would Rout Cannonism In Schools.

RESULT OF INSURGENT VICTORY

Witnessing Rules Fight In the House Stirs Illinois Congressman's Son to Draft a Constitution Under Which Teachers Are Put Completely at Mercy of Pupils.

Insurgency has broken out in a new place, much to the dismay of Representative Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, who is one of the most loyal supporters of Speaker Joseph G. Cannon and the house rules. Mr. Lowden's fourteen-year-old son, George M. Pullman Lowden, who is in the sixth grade in a Washington school, has revised the school constitution along lines which make it impossible for teachers to exercise arbitrary power.

In the recent fight over the house rules Mr. Lowden took his boy to the capitol to listen to the debate. The youngster was deeply impressed with the victory of the insurgents over Speaker Cannon and after the battle pestered his father with questions about the speaker and his methods.

Shown to Speaker Cannon.

For several days the little fellow was busily engaged in the preparation of a paper, but would not tell his father what he was doing. He was drafting a set of rules for the government of his school. These rules are now in the possession of Mr. Lowden, who has submitted them to Speaker Cannon as an example of what full fledged insurgency means. They are as follows:

Article A—1. That if any unjust law or too hard work be imposed on the scholars they may rebel on the teachers.

2. They may also fine and arrest him.

3. Hereafter the pupils may elect a committee on rules for the school. The teachers are ineligible.

4. The teachers won't have any right to make any laws whatsoever.

Article B—1. The pupils may refuse the work if they wish, and the teachers may insist, but not to any good purpose.

2. The highest fine that can be made is $90, the lowest $15. No warrants are necessary for the arrests.

3. Cross teachers are compelled by the pupils to leave the room without complaint or words of any kind. If they do that a fine can be imposed on the teacher or teachers.

Have No Vote on School Questions.

4. The teachers or parents are not allowed to cast a vote on any subject applying to school questions. If they do they are liable to be fined or put under guard.

5. The committee on rules shall consist of seven students of the third grade, six from the fourth grade, nine from the fifth grade, eleven from the six grade, seven from the seventh grade, eight from the eighth grade and one from the second grade, the whole committee consisting of forty-nine members. If more than one-seventh agree to a certain question it is carried, no matter how much opposition there is.

6. A pupil can be withdrawn from the committee or school if he relents to a teacher or teachers or to anybody.

7. The school shall begin when the committee wants it to and end when the committee wants it to, and no other time.

"We've been beaten at our own game," remarked Representative Victor Murdock of Kansas, one of the insurgents of the house, when he saw a copy of the "school constitution" revised along insurgent lines by Master George Lowden, who is now busy perfecting his insurgency.

Young Lowden is a bright faced, rosy cheeked youngster who does not look as if he had sacrificed any of the diversions of boyhood to burn the midnight oil on his rules. He is tall for his age and remarkably well informed. He is already a good mixer and apparently feels the best of good will for every one but schoolteachers. He explained, somewhat reluctantly, that his grievance against this class is not altogether impersonal, adding that there was a certain instructor whom he did not care to name who was sometimes "a bit obstreperous." Young Lowden is named for his maternal grandfather, the late George M. Pullman, the railroad magnate.

The Starling an Outlaw.

Neither its poetical name nor its beauty of shape and plumage is to save the European starling, a destructive grain eating bird, from the list of undesirable immigrants to the United States. Along with the mongoose, the English sparrow and fruit eating bats, the starling is to be refused admission to American ports. The treasury department at Washington has just issued the order.

Unique Interest In the Future.

King Edward of Great Britain, as is generally known, has a weakness for walking sticks, but a writer tells of another collection in his majesty's possession which will have a unique interest in the future. This consists of canes gathered from every war in which British soldiers have fought during the early days of Queen Victoria.

A QUAINT OLD TAVERN

The Old Cheshire Cheese, In the Heart of London.

SERVES A FAMOUS PUDDING.

A Noble Pastry It Is, and It Was Sampled by Such Men as Gladstone, Dickens, Thackeray, Tennyson, Trollope and Whistler.

Nearly all Americans when they go to London make it a point to visit that quaint old tavern in the heart of the newspaper and printing business, the Old Cheshire Cheese, to partake of its famous pudding.

It is the Londoner's delight when he gets back to Fleet street to make a rush for the pudding, and it is almost the last thing he eats before leaving it. Travelers in the Sahara have seen mirages of that pudding, and during the Boer war the men shut up in Ladysmith and Mafeking dreamed of it at regular intervals.

Precisely at 1 o'clock p. m. Tom conveys the pudding from the first to the main floor. It is a big pudding, and the price of it is just 2 shillings—that is to say, a feed of it is 2 shillings, as much as you please, as many shares as you ask for, cut and come again, all for 48 cents of American coin. Cheap, aye, and, oh, how good it is! It is worth crossing the Atlantic to get a sniff of it, and the aroma lingers in the memory for many a day.

Big? The dimensions are Falstaffian. It is a round earthen vessel something more than two dozen inches deep, with a diameter of about eighteen inches. A noble pastry, my masters!

When it is placed upon the service table an elliptical white crust meets the hungry gaze. Tom and his myrmidons take their places in front facing the host, who, knife and spoon in hand, poses with gentle dignity and benignant mien. It is a moment of solemn thought when every man hopes that his portion will be larger than his friend's and that he will be blessed with an abundance of gravy. But they ought from years of acquaintance with the host to understand that his hand is as steady as his judgment is impartial.

No more and nothing better for one than for another. He waves his weapons, and the first onslaught is made. The room is full of a delicious steam bearing with it the concentrated essences of ambrosial substances. The guests sniff it up and murmur choice blessings on the cook, the original inventor, the house and the host. It is a time when men feel good, one toward the other.

One smell of that pudding makes the whole world kin. This famous pudding, which has tickled the palates of thousands, is thus compounded:

A crust of flour, water and suet.
Beefsteak.
Sheep's kidneys.
Larks.
Mushrooms (freshly gathered).
Oysters.
Stock.
Pepper and salt.

But it is the boiling that does it. For at least twelve hours this heaven sent pudding is kept slowly simmering in an immense copper specially constructed for the purpose. It must not boil quickly, but the same temperature be kept up the whole period. The steak assumes a juicy tenderness; the larks—not sparrows, as some malignant spirit has suggested, although sparrow pudding is not to be despised—are seethed to the bone, and you can chew up each little songster without an effort; the kidneys are soft and mushy and offer no resistance to the digestive organs, and the oysters, despite their lengthened cooking, are not leathery. The amalgamation and assimilation of the variety of constituents are perfect; the result is bliss.

There is a story told of one eminent litterateur who had seven helpings of the pudding and still yearned for more, and there is another remarkable narrative of four men who ordered a pudding of the regulation size and finished it among them.

J. Pierpont Morgan praised the pudding, and Theodore Roosevelt was delighted with it. Lord Beaconsfield bestowed his approbation thereon, and Gladstone thought it far superior to his famous "three courses." Dickens, Thackeray, Meredith, Swinburne, Tennyson, Trollope, Whistler, Leighton, Sala, Phil May—all sorts of the best of men of their day have fed upon the pudding, and it no doubt helped to inspire their work.

Apparently any cook can fashion it, mix it, fix it, boil it. Let any cook try it. Lots of cooks have tried it, but the results have not been satisfactory. There was a man who once ran the Old Cheshire Cheese, and in his day the pudding first achieved its great fame. When he sold the old hostelry and took a house in the financial district he announced that the same pudding—the same in every respect—would be served every Saturday.

Many of the Cheese's old patrons came around to celebrate. There was the size, but the aroma was wanting; there were the identical materials, but the flavor was not in them. It was not the same, not a bit of it. There was something missing. It may have been the shades of the departed great ones of a bygone time. And so it is that today the famous dish of the Old Cheshire Cheese tastes as of old, and its devotees cannot be seduced by any designing invitation based upon "just as good" simply because there is nothing just as good.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Thoughts are mightier than the strength of hand.—Sophocles.

CIVILIZATION.

The old Hindoo saw in his dream the human race led out to its various fortunes. First men were in chains, which went back to an iron hand. Then he saw them led by threads from the brain, which went upward to an unseen hand. The first was despotism, iron and ruling by force. The last was civilization, ruling by ideas.—Wendell Phillips.

OPENING UP PEARL HARBOR.

Incidents of Building Great Naval Station In Hawaii.

DIVER WHO FIGHTS SHARKS.

Lund, While Laying the Blasts, Now Carries a Spear With Which to Keep Them Away—New Concrete Drydock to Be Large Enough For Any Battleship.

W. F. Dillingham, who is in charge of the work of developing Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, which the United States government expects to make one of the finest naval stations in the world, arrived at New York recently from Honolulu on his way to Washington.

Mr. Dillingham is the manager of the Hawaiian company which is dredging and opening up the harbor and the resident manager in Hawaii of the bridge company which is building the drydock.

"The contract for the harbor dredging was let in December, 1908, and calls for the removal of 4,600,000 cubic feet of coral rock and sand from the reefs which project into the harbor, making the channel too tortuous for any but small vessels to get in," said Mr. Dillingham to an interviewer. "The harbor basin now has an area and a depth of water sufficient to float all the navies of the world. Up to date no machinery has ever been designed for digging coral in a seaway, and there are about 1,400,000 cubic yards of it at Pearl Harbor that comes out in the reef suction, where it is exposed to the surf.

Often Has to Fight Sharks.

"How is the work done? Well, principally by means of divers, high grade powder and blasting gelatin. We have two experienced divers, one a native Hawaiian and the other an American. The latter has had a good deal of experience on the Pacific coast and also in Hawaii. And his work requires not only skill, but bravery. His name is Martin Lund. He is a giant and in his diving suit must weigh close on to 600 pounds. Lund works eight hours a day and sets off about eighteen blasts in that time. Sometimes he carries on his work with sharks all about him He often has to fight them.

"You see, the blasts kill large numbers of smaller fish in the waters, and every day as soon as the blasting starts the sharks come around looking for food. Sometimes you will see as many as twenty of them at one time.

"The whole outer section of the harbor has been laid out like a checkerboard, and we shoot in squares. Lund or Olepan, the Hawaiian, lays the powder or gelatin on a ledge and fixes the electric connections. No boring is necessary when the pressure of thirty to thirty-five feet of water keeps the blasting material in position. When there are only two or three feet of water above it is blown up from 400 to 500 feet in the air, but at thirty feet there is hardly a lift of the surface of the water.

"When Lund had his first battle with the sharks he was armed only with a knife. He had told some of the diving crew that there were lots of sharks about, but they thought he was only trying to make it appear that he had a particularly dangerous job. One day they felt a jerk at the line and hauled quickly, and there was Lund slashing away at something near his feet. When they had hauled him in a dead shark came up to the surface. Then Lund had a spear made. I was rather afraid that he would decide that he didn't wish to continue the job, but when I spoke to him he grinned and said that as soon as he got his spear he wouldn't care how many sharks there were about. All he wanted was something to keep them away from his feet. He has got so that he pays no attention to them unless they come right down at him.

Larger Drydock Planned.

"About three weeks ago Lund was laying a charge of powder and was wiring it up for a blast when something made a turn around above him, and, looking up, he saw a big white belly overhead. He picked up his spear and attacked it, and it rose to the surface. The crew in the boat were startled to see the shark appear near them, but they threw a line over its tail and hauled it aboard dead. Lund had aimed at the right spot.

"The drydock as designed and contracted for was to be 620 feet long, but it has practically been decided to lengthen it 100 feet and possibly 130. Negotiations are now on between the government and the contractors, and it is expected that the dock to be finally decided upon will be large enough to take in any battleship of today as well as to meet requirements for years to come. The dock will be of concrete. The excavation for the smaller dock is well under way, and two cargoes of lumber for the false work have been received at Pearl Harbor. The two vessels which brought this were the first of their size to enter the harbor, the work already done having made that possible."

Hail the Safety Hatpin.

Here it is at last—a safety hatpin. No more gouged eyes. A boy of eighteen, Moad Lamarr of Kansas City, has patented a safety catch that covers the sharp end of the pin with an ornament adding to the hat's appearance.

TOWN AND GOWN ROW

The Origin of an Ancient Dispute at Oxford.

STALE FISH AND BAD BEER.

The University Authorities Objected to These, and Then Came the Battle of St. Scholastica's Day and Open Warfare, Massacre and Pillage.

The modern town and gown row, supposing that town and gown rows have not altogether ceased, is a row about nothing in particular, inspired solely by the joy of battle and the lust for strife. The juniors fight, and the seniors separate the combatants. In the old days there was really something to fight about, and the seniors were as pugnacious as the juniors and joined as pugnaciously in the affrays. The dispute arose in the first instance out of disagreements between overlapping jurisdictions. The origin was in the divergent views entertained by the municipal and university authorities on matters of sanitation and hygiene, and it will not be denied that the university authorities were in the right. They objected to the sale of stinking fish and the brewing of beer from water contaminated with sewage. The townsmen thought such objections fastidious and were very angry when the university appealed to the king to interfere; hence constant bickerings and a frequent exchange of abusive language; hence ultimately open war and that battle of St. Scholastica's day, which takes rank in history as the earliest of the recorded town and gown rows.

The trouble began in a tavern on Feb. 10, 1354. Some scholars who were drinking there found fault with the wine, and the vintner said that it was quite good enough wine for them. The scholars threw the wine at the vintner's head, and the vintner summoned his friends and neighbors to the rescue. They rang the bell of the Church of St. Martin at Carfax, and the populace, summoned by this tocsin, shot at the scholars with bows and arrows. The chancellor of the university appeared upon the scene, ingeminating peace where there was no peace, and he also was shot at. Then the bell of the university Church of St. Mary was started ringing, and the melee became general and lasted until the setting of the sun. No one was killed. The gownsmen got the best of it, and the chancellor was under the impression that the riot was over. He issued a proclamation bidding the scholars go to their lectures as usual on the following day.

They went as he bade them, but not with the impunity which he expected. The townsmen had vowed and planned vengeance and were lying in wait for them. Re-enforcements—2,000 peasants carrying an ominous black flag—swarmed into the city from Cowley, Headington and Hinksey. The Carfax tocsin pealed out a second time, just after the midday dinner hour, and the tocsin of St. Mary's responded as before. The townsmen not only assailed the scholars in the streets, but, when they fled before superior forces, pursued them into their lodgings, inns and halls, killing all that they could and stealing or destroying all the property that they could lay their hands on.

Peacemakers were badly needed, and the chancellor having called for peace in vain, the monks tried what they could do. There sallied forth a valiant band of friars, carrying their crucifix and seeking to compose the strife by chanting litanies. Without avail. They themselves became the objects of the popular fury; a scholar was struck down while actually clinging to the crucifix. Other scholars were followed into the churches and massacred at the foot of the altar. Dead bodies were flung on to dunghills; the wounded were haled to prison, and even torture was not spared. "The crowns of some chaplains," says the chronicler—"viz, all the skin, so far as the tonsure went—these diabolical imps flayed off in scorn of their clergy."

At last the university could resist no more. The gownsmen began to flee into the country, all of them save the scholars of Merton, who alone had solid walls behind which they could retire. Withdrawing to their college while the town triumphed outside, the sole representatives of learning in a deserted city which the bishop had laid under an interdict, the scholars of Merton waited for the day of vengeance and redress of grievances.

It came. The king sent down a special commission to investigate. The mayor of Oxford and his bailiffs were sent to prison, the sheriff was removed from office, and presently the town was further humiliated by the bestowal of fresh privileges upon the gownsmen. The gownsmen and not the townsmen were henceforth to decide whether fish stunk, and if they decided that it did stink they were to send it to the hospitals for the consumption of the sick. They were also adjudged pecuniary compensation for the damage done, and their supremacy was in various other ways established on a firm basis.

Such was the first town and gown row, in which Merton may be said to have saved the university. But for Merton the university would then have been wiped out and its clerks would have been scattered over the face of the earth.—Pall Mall Gazette.

RAINS IN THE NORTHWEST

Of Inestimable Value to the Growing Crops.

Fargo, N. D., May 16.—Eastern North Dakota and Western Minnesota were visited by rain which fell in varying quantities in different parts of the states. At Fargo a light rain began early in the afternoon and continued until late at night. The sky is still cloudy, with prospects of more rain.

The rain is of inestimable value to this state. The cool, dry weather which preceded the rain has made the roots of the grain go down deep into the ground in search of moisture and the rain, if continued, will help to firmly root the grain.

Crookston, Minn., has been visited by an all day rain.

Rain is falling over a wide ditrict on the iron ranges of Minnesota.

Light rain drizzled down on Iowa like a bequest of thousands of dollars to Iowa farms that for several weeks have been sadly in need of moisture.

Cherub Devine

By

SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1909, by Mitchell Kennerley

So early the next morning, before any one else on Hewington Acres had even roused and turned over for a sunrise nap, the Countess Vecchi stole quietly downstairs, let herself out of the front windows and walked determinedly in the direction of the icehouse.

Meanwhile Cherub Devine had hurried back to town and sought out that distinguished champion of the rights and privileges of such corporations as can afford to pay liberal fees, Mr. Robert Jaynes Driscoll.

Your average client would not have attempted to find Mr. Driscoll at that hour in the evening or, having found him, would hardly have expected him to give legal advice out of business hours. But Cherub Devine never stopped to inquire whether or not he was violating professional ethics or intruding on personal privacy. He knew that Bob Driscoll would most likely be found either at his club or at home. Five minutes in a telephone booth settled the question. Mr. Driscoll was at home. He would be glad to see Cherub.

Mr. Devine hailed a taxicab and within half an hour was being shown into a back room whose walls were lined from floor to ceiling with thick books bound in calfskin.

Mr. Driscoll smiled and waved Mr Devine toward a chair.

"Do much of this night work?" asked the Cherub. "Have to, I suppose, to keep things running."

Again Mr. Driscoll smiled. He was quite used to Mr. Devine's breezy manner. He asked of Mr. Devine what was up.

"All kinds of things," responded the Cherub, dropping into a red leather chair and extracting one of his black cigars from a waistcoat pocket.

"Firstly," began the Cherub, "you're the chief attorney for that blasted railroad I've just loaded up with, aren't you?"

Mr. Driscoll nodded.

"Good! Now, as my private counsel I'd like to have you tell me if I can safely get rid of being president of it within the next twenty-four hours."

"Not tired of it so soon, are you?"

"Tired! Why, say, Bob, there isn't work enough about a job of that kind to keep a man awake. I put in all one day trying to find things to do. By 10 o'clock I'd O. K.'d a basketful of general orders that I didn't know anything about, fired three fluffy haired typewriter girls and issued a dozen annual passes to my friends. Then my private secretary and I sat around and looked at each other until luncheon time. I didn't show up again. No, no, Bob! It may be highly respectable and all that, but I've got to be where there's something doing. I want to get back into the street."

"There's nothing to prevent you from resigning."

"Except putting in some one that'll work things the way I want 'em worked. What do you say to old Rimmer?"

"Rimmer of Chicago?"

"Yep; the one we nipped on short holdings. Now, he hates me as the devil hates holy water, but he's a hustler, and he knows the railroad game like a book. He's down and out now, but he won't stay down, and when he gets up again I'd rather have him on my side than against me. Guess he'd rather be with me too. How about Rimmer, eh?"

Mr. Driscoll sent a quick but appreciative glance at the Cherub. He indorsed the Rimmer nomination.

"Then that's settled," observed the Cherub. "You send for him in the morning and put it up to him. I figure that he'll be mighty glad to crawl on the band wagon. Now for item No. 2. Bet a million you couldn't guess what I've been doing."

"Stake too high," laughed Mr. Driscoll, "but I think I could come near guessing. You've been getting married."

"Z-z-z-ing, but that was close—I don't think!" replied the Cherub. "You're within gunshot, though, Bob. And I expect I might as well own up that I'd like to, but there's no hope. I found the right girl, all right, and I'd just told her about it, when who should show up but a hubby."

"Not hers?"

"Right: I thought all along she was a widow. Every one thinks so. He's moon didn't last more than a few hours. She leaves him in Italy and comes home. Then it's reported that he has died in a sanitarium—family don't deny it, girl puts on black, and all hands hope it will soon be so. But he refuses to die and comes over here to hold them up for cash. As it happens, the first person he runs across is me. Now, what do you suppose I did to him?"

Mr. Driscoll's eyes concentrated seriously on the bland face of Cherub Devine.

"I hope"— he began.

"Oh, I didn't hurt him!" interrupted the Cherub. "I'm no hothead—never struck a man in my life—wouldn't know how. But perhaps I did worse. I decoyed him to an icehouse and locked him in there."

"You what!" Even the composure of Bob Driscoll was stirred by this unique confession.

"Something had to be done right away. So I just jollied him along to the icehouse, tolled him inside and shut the door on him."

"So you locked him up, did you? Why didn't you let him make his demand and then have him arrested on a charge of blackmail?"

"Couldn't. That would bring out the whole story. See? She's been posing as a widow. That's her father's work. Think of what the papers would make of that! No, no! We don't want to go into court, and the count mustn't."

"I'm afraid, Cherub, that he's right when he calls you a kidnaper. That would be the technical charge. It's rather a serious offense, too—felony, you know."

"All right; I'm not squeamish. Look up some good criminal lawyer, will you, and have him let me know how far I can go?"

"M—m—m—m—"— murmured Mr Driscoll through pursed lips. "Why not soothe him with a few hundred dollar bills and let him out?"

"That's where my fool pride comes in, Bob. Didn't know I had any, but I guess I have. See here; I can't buy off the husband of the girl I—well, it don't seem right. That would stick in my crop."

"But you can't imprison a man indefinitely on your own hook, Cherub. Why, man, you would run the risk of a long term of imprisonment."

"I suspected that. Well, I can stand it if he can. And he gets his dose first."

Mr. Driscoll looked long and earnestly at the Cherub. At last he suggested, "You must be very fond of the young woman, Devine."

"That's putting it mildly, Bob, and she's worth it too. Why, say, she's the finest, sweetest, cutest— But there! I've got no right to talk like that. It's all off. There's that infernal count."

"Why hasn't she divorced him?"

"Against her principles. I like her all the better for it too. Oh, she's the genuine article, Bob! And I've got to give her up. Honest, it's tough!"

For a moment or so despair tried to dim the cheerful gleam of Cherub Devine's blue eyes. Then, with a shake of his shoulder, he threw it off.

"But this isn't getting on, Bob. If I'm going to have dealings with this Count Vecchi, I want to know who he is and all about him. Might stir up something that would be useful, you know."

"Good idea," commented Mr Driscoll.

"It's the way I like to do business. Now, what connections have you with any private information bureau on the continent?"

"There's Deufstetters, in Vienna."

"Slower than creeping paralysis! We'd get a report in about six months. No; we'll try Jimmy McQuade. Used to be one of the Record-Herald boys in Chicago. Now he's at the head of a newspaper syndicate in Paris. He's got columns of stuff out of me. And he's the kind that will get a move on. I'll cable him tonight to look up this count of mine and wire back full details. Eh? So long, Bob. I'll drop in at your office about noon tomorrow."

At midnight, from a downtown detective agency, four men started out to guard the exits to Hewington Acres with orders to stop and hold a slim young man wearing a frock coat and a silk hat should he attempt to leave the grounds.

CHAPTER XIII.

WHAT would have been the emotions of Cherub Devine could he have known that the Countess Vecchi had risen before the sun was fairly up for the purpose of interviewing his prisoner?

The Countess Vecchi was beginning to wish that she hadn't come, after all. Who could say what sort of prisoner she might be on the point of rousing? A man who was Cherub Devine's rival for some woman's affections, so her father had as good as said, but she could not believe that now. Perhaps the man was a criminal or a dangerous lunatic. The countess shrank away from the padlocked door and glanced anxiously about. It might have been wiser to have waited until later and then insisted upon Timmins coming with her.

But, no, she felt that she wanted no witnesses to this interview. Suppose her father's version should be correct? The countess lifted a determined chin and stepped briskly up to the heavy door. She doubled up one fist and tried to make a noise by hammering the wood. This was a failure. Then she looked around for a small stone, [illegible] her handkerchief a series of loud thumps. This proved effective, for an instant later she heard a creaking as of wire springs, and a sleep laden voice murmured some indistinct reply.

Bulls In Parliament.

Lord Londonderry once threw the house of lords into roars of laughter during the debate on the second reading of the Irish land bill by gravely declaring that "this is the reason why you have failed to settle the Irish land question in the future as you have done in the past."

In the course of the same speech he concluded a period with: "This is the keystone of the bill. Are you going to kill it?"

Better still was a sentence which he uttered in 1897 when speaking once more on the Irish land question—"That, your lordship will see," referring to a quotation he had just made, "indorses up to the hilt what I have said."—Lon-

HOW GUNDERSON MET HIS DEATH

Becoming Sick on the Road, he sought Shelter in the Uninhabited residence of Erick Olson

WAS SIX MILES FROM CAMBRIDGE

Chairman of Town Board Took Him to Cambridge and he Died on the Way

A special to the Duluth Herald under date of Cambridge, Minn., May 14, states:—Charles T. Gunderson of Brainerd, came to the uninhabited residence of Erick Olson in the township of Spring Vale, about six miles from this village, Wednesday evening in his medicine wagon and with some household goods, badly in need of a physician's care. Some of the neighbors noticed his condition and notified the chairman of the town board who started to bring him to this village. When about a mile from here he died.

On his person was found $250 in cash and a note for $250, besides some small change. He had evidently tried to start a fire during the night for his shoes and socks are burned and his legs show signs of burns. The personal effects of the deceased have been taken care of by Coroner O. W. Sterner and relatives have been notified.

BIG LAND SALE AT WALKER

Over 4000 Acres of Land Were Sold at State Land Sale—High Prices Realized

F. O. Muzzy, of Leader, and W. F. Delline, of Cannon Falls, who were buyers at the recent state land sale at Walker stated that almost 5000 acres of land were sold to actual settlers, and that this was the largest land sale held in the state this season.

Both gentlemen and others in their party stayed over a short time in Brainerd. The highest price paid per acre was for a parcel of land that sold at $15.50. This piece last years was appraised at only $6 per acre and had no buyers at that low figure. Real estate values in Minnesota seem to be advancing.

This little river boat is electric lighted, steam heated and provided with all possible conveniences and comforts. A trip on the "Oriole," as she is called, will prove a revelation to many people. MAKES STRIKING SPEECH

Former Brainerd Boy Makes a Hit as Speaker at Republican Meeting

The Svea Republican club of Duluth, held a banquet Friday evening, at which Governor Eberhart and other notables were present. James P. Boyle, of Eveleth, formerly of this city was one of the speakers and the Duluth Herald has the following to say of his speech:

Mr. Boyle made one of the most striking speeches of the evening. His talk was a red hot Republican preachment, and the ardor of the audience as evidenced by frequent interuptions of applause was proof that it was what the banqueters wanted to hear. Mr. Boyle served notice, inferentially, on the old-time leaders of the party that any symptoms of a fossilized condition will in the future be diagnosed as cause for the eradication of the victim.

FOREST FIRES UNDER CONTROL

State Sanatorium at Walker Escaped Destruction by Flames

DANGER WAS GREAT ONCE

But Flames are Now Under Control According to General Manager Gemmell

"The forest fires from Kelliher to Walker," said W. H. Gemmel today, "are under control and no damage has resulted to the State Sanatorium for consumptives at Walker." Charles T. Kelley, editor of the Menahaga Journal, stated as follows: "The fires between La Port and Yola were fierce. A lot of valuable timber was destroyed. People from these sections were unable to drive through the woods until the fire abated. The rain over most of the M. & I. railway has saved the country from destruction."

Mr. and Mrs. Kelley were on their way from La Port to Menagha and passed through Brainerd where intervied. Editor Kelley has a son working on the La Port News.

SUNDAY M. & I. TRAINS

No. 33 and 34 May Run on Sunday, Giving Daily Train Service

It is rumored that No's. 33 and 34 Minnesota and International passenger trains, may be run Sunday too.

This would give daily train service on this popular road and afford still more accomodation to the constantly increasing summer tourist travel from the Twin Cities and other points.

So many traveling men and summer tourists have spoken about this additional train service that one is lead to believe that the story has some foundation.

W. H. Gemmell, when seen this morning, stated that this additional train service is something the railway has had under consideration for some time.

No Cause For Him to Complain.

"See here!" remarked the guest to the new waiter. "There doesn't seem to be any soup on this menu card."

"Oh, no, sir!" replied the waiter nervously. "I didn't spill it at this table. It was the one on the other side of the room."

COMMISSIONERS MEETING

Proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners, Meeting Held May 14th, 1910.

Pursuant to adjournment, board met at auditor's office at 2 o'clock p. m. All members present except Commissioner Krech.

Three bids were opend for cement culvert across Ditch No. 2, between Long Lake and Crow Wing. A motion was made and carried to let the contract to John Setula for $188.00, he being the lowest bidder.

Three bids were opened for cement tions and water pipes at the court house and jail were as follows:

Ritari Bros	$315.00
L. W. Sherlund	287.00
Slipp-Gruenhagen Co.	248.00

--Motion made and carried that the contract be awarded to the Slipp-Gruenhagen Co. at the price stated.

Bids for the new maple floor in the court house hall were received from E. H. Huseman and P. W. Bidwell. A motion was made and carried to let the job to Mr. Huseman at $103.00, he being the lowest bidder.

Commissioner Kienow made a further report on the "Buffalo Creek" bridge and advocated putting in a new steel bridge at once, in view of the fact that it would take nearly $300.00 to put in any kind of repair and then it would stand for only one or two years at the most. A motion was made and duly carried that the auditor advertise for bids for a 30 foot steel span with reinforced cement piers, each bidder to submit his own plan, bids to be received at the next meeting, June 7th, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The question of leasing the mineral right on the county farm was next taken up. The proposal of the Northwestern Improvement company having been formally withdrawn, the one of Daniel Waite was considered. He offered to take out a lease covering S½ SW¼ and pay $3,750.00 per year. After discussing the matter at some length the board came to the conclusion that the county should receive a higher royalty than 25 cents per ton, and named 40 cents per ton as being in their judgment a reasonable price. A motion was finally made and carried that all propositions be laid on the table until the next regular meeting, thus giving all parties plenty of time to reflect upon the matter.

Mrs. Emma Tuck residing on Sec. 17 in Rabbitt Lake town, desired some assistance from the county for a bridge across Ditch No. 11. The matter was referred to Commissioner Edquist to investigate and report.

Upon motion the meeting adjourned.

County Auditor.

E. C. Clemans Interviewed

Rev. E. C. Clemans passed through Brainerd today from Cass Lake to his home in Duluth. He spoke in the interests of the anti-saloon league afternoon and evening at Cass Lake.

He mentioned the excitement occasioned at Cass Lake when a little boy aged 8 years was lost in the woods on Sunday evening. The fire bells were rung and 80 men patrolled the woods. The little fellow was found about six o'clock in the morning—not asleep but manfully walking down one of the numerous trails.

Rev. Clemans was in the great temperance parade at Minneapolis when 40,000 men were in line. Walking in this parade and resolutely declining the proffer of a carriage was Governor Eberhart's aged mother.

GREAT FESTIVAL OF AN EMPIRE.

London's Stirring History to Be Shown In a Pageant.

ALL THE COLONIES INTERESTED

Crystal Palace Will Be Scene of a Vast Display For Two Months. Striking Scenes From Before Time of Romans on to Modern Times Will Be Presented.

Though London is possibly the last of all the big cities in the world to brag about its history, that city is as full of history—and very interesting history, too—as an egg is of meat. It will be shown in a pageant which Frank Lascelles is arranging, called "the festival of empire and the pageant of London." It will be produced May 24 and will last during June and July. Whatever profits accrue from it are to be given to the king's hospital fund.

This festival of empire, which will be produced at the Crystal palace, is intended to give instruction in the history of London and to show its gradual growth and importance as the heart of a worldwide empire. The Crystal palace was chosen as the most suitable center for such a festival.

A tremendous stand is being erected, from which not only this open air play can be seen, but also a view of the rolling hills of Kent and Surrey. This look alone is well worth while going to the Crystal palace to enjoy.

Naturally the imagination thrills at the thought of a series of London pageants—reproductions of scenes which bring home to the citizens of London the historic greatness of their city.

Fifteen Thousand Persons Engaged.

The principle of the pageant will be the representation of certain episodes in the history of London from the times of the early Britons to the nineteenth century. All this will be too much to see in one performance, so the story will be divided into three parts, each part having seven scenes, and these different parts will be given alternately on afternoons and evenings.

Fifteen thousand persons are to be employed in the pageant. In some of the scenes nearly 2,000 people will appear.

In part 1 the first scene is called "The Dawn of History." It shows prehistoric London, where the Britons lived on the river which they called the Fleet. Then come the Romans, who rebuilt the city of London, and after that the third shows the spread of Christianity. Scene 4 is the Danish invasion, showing those fine old freebooters, the vikings, who pushed their queer looking boats up the Thames. Then the Norman conquest, with King Harold's death and his subjects kissing the feet of the conqueror. And so it goes on through the age of chivalry, when in the reign of Edward III. there were tournaments in Cheapside.

Part 2 begins with the Canterbury pilgrims and the tragedy of Thomas a Becket. Following that is the Wat Tyler affair and Dick Whittington, probably with his cat, riding out with the king. Then we are given the war of the Roses and another triumph of conquest when Henry V. returns after his defeat of the French.

Modern Period Shown.

From this time on the pageant becomes practically modern history. There is the discovery of the new world, there is "merrie England," there is the reign of Queen Bess, and so on down to part 3, which has to do with Shakespeare and his barnlike theater, with the coming of Pocahontas to England, with Wolfe and Montcalm in Canada, with Captain Cook, who had found another new world, and finally with the collapse of Napoleon and the end of the great continental struggle for mastery.

The final scene will be the gathering of the English colonies in London and Great Britain, typified as the mother with her children.

The representatives of English colonies are quite as enthusiastic about this empire festival as are the people who live in the heart of the empire. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa and every other British possession has representatives in London who promise most enthusiastic support.

Lord Plymouth, the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Desborough and many other wealthy and prominent Englishmen are not only contributing large sums of money to this pageant, but also their personal time and attention. It will be the biggest show that London has ever had.

LEGENDS OF ANIMALS

Interesting Old Time Stories of Bird and Beast.

THE HORSE AND THE CAMEL.

An Arabian Folklore Tale Tells Why Every Steed Shudders on a First Meeting With a Camel—Solomon and the Neck of the Vulture.

In the beginning the birds had no feathers, but at last word was brought that the Great Spirit had their clothes ready if they would send some one for them. As the distance was long, the turkey buzzard was selected on account of his endurance, and in recognition of the service he was to have first choice of apparel, the one condition being that he could try no suit on the second time. Can you guess the result? For one trifling objection or another he let all the fine feathers go by until, to his horrified astonishment there was nothing left but the poor, commonplace suit that he wears today.

We talk conceitedly of the airship as though a brand new invention of the modern brain when thousands of years ago King Solomon had a most satisfactory one, a magic carpet upon which he frequently took a spin through space. Only one fault could be found with this carpet touring car. It had no covering, and too often the sun shone uncomfortably upon the royal head. Now, the wisdom of Solomon included a rare linguistic accomplishment. The king spoke the language of birds. So one day when out riding on his carpet he called upon some passing vultures to hold their wings over him by way of awning. But they were going north, the king toward the south, and to his righteous indignation the birds insolently refused.

"Cursed be ye, O vultures!" he cried in wrath. "And because you will not obey the commands of your lord who rules over the whole world the feathers of your necks shall fall off and the heat of the sun and the coldness of winter and the keenness of the wind and the beating of the rain shall fall upon your rebellious necks, which shall not be protected with feathers like the necks of other birds, and, whereas you have hitherto fared delicately, henceforward you shall eat carrion and your race shall be impure until the end of the world."

According to Arab folklore, one day Allah called the south wind to him, condensed it, took a handful, blew upon it the breath of life and thus created a horse. But the steed at once began to find fault. His neck, he complained, was too short to reach the grass, his back had nothing to steady a saddle, his hoofs were so sharp that they would surely sink into the sand. Instead of reproving his ingratitude in words Allah then created the camel as an object lesson of reproach.

The horse shuddered at the sight of what he wanted to become, and this is the reason that every horse starts when first meeting his caricature.

Perhaps you have not had the opportunity of gazing dentist-wise into the mouth of a coyote and so have never wondered why its back teeth looked as though they were broken off and forced down into the gums, but you must surely have come across many an empty locust skin.

To the south of the Zuni lands in New Mexico a coyote once started out hunting, but got no farther than the foot of a certain old pine tree, so fascinated did he become in a locust who sat playing a flute and singing in one of its branches. In fact, such was the animal's enthusiasm that he insisted upon taking a lesson on the spot. His voice proved hoarse and growly, but he persevered until he learned the words of the locust song and turned homeward, proudly repeating them, when by bad luck he fell into a gopher's hole, said other words under his breath and forgot his lines.

Back to the pine tree he trotted, again imposed upon the locust's good nature, once more sallied forth in triumph. But this time as he practiced aloud he frightened a flock of pigeons that flew out with such a noise as completely to muddle his brain, and there was nothing left for him but another appeal to the wornout locust.

Now, even a music teacher will turn, and the locust, seeing him coming from afar and having heard that coyotes ate insects, decided to rid himself of this tiresome fellow. No sooner thought than done. In a flash he swelled up, split his skin and crawled out. Finding at hand a clear, light colored bit of quartz, he put it in the empty skin, mucilaged it up the back with pitch and flew off to another tree.

The trick worked to a charm. The coyote called out to the supposed locust again and again without receiving a reply, became enraged, snatched the effigy out of the tree and bit so hard on the stone that he ran yelping away. The water of a creek partly soothed his pain, but ever since the mouth of a coyote has shown the effect of that tragic bite, and "whenever a locust ventures out on a summer morning to sing a song it is his custom to protect himself from the consequences of attracting too much attention by skinning himself and leaving his counterpart in the tree."—May C. Ringwalt in Los Angeles Times.

Family Pedigrees.

Speaking to the students in an Englishwomen's college, an educator said: "Dig out all your family skeletons. Your relatives will probably be annoyed, but dig them out and face them. Make out your pedigree, tracing your family back to your great-grandparents and their brothers and sisters. By this means you can learn what traits to avoid and what diseases to guard against. It takes time, tact and temper to hunt back to the record of one's family, but it is worth it. Two men may seem the same, yet one man may hand down disease and crime to his descendants, while the other may hand down only those qualities that are good."

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Saturday, May 21, will see the most interesting high school baseball game ever held in the city. The contest will be between Brainerd and Staples and because of the existing rivalry should prove exciting. Capt. White will do the twirling for Brainerd and incidentally make goodly number of the Staples batters look like Merrifield barnstormers. There is absolutely no doubt that if the fans respond with the same generous loyalty they have shown in the past and turn out to spur the boys on to greater efforts, Staples will be gloriously defeated. The game will be called in time to allow the four-o'clock shop men to get there, and a large crowd of these is expected. Every pupil in town will be there to root.

We wish to thank the public for their kind patronage of the class play, "The Princess". It was a decided success financially and the proceeds are to be used for a senior memorial.

At the rate that catalogues come rolling in daily, we are reminded of the fact that many of our high school seniors of this year will be the college Freshmen of next.

Though various other duties of the class of 1910 prevented the publication of an annual this year, get busy ye Seniors of 1911 and begin the very first of next September to prepare one.

Boost again for a school gymnasium. You'll never be sorry for it.

Dorothy Lyddon spent Monday and Tuesday in St. Paul.

The picture won by the eigh grade as contestants in the Minneapolis Journal Junior contest, is entitled "A Scene in Venice." Those writing successful compositions are: George Berggren, Benjamin Groenig, Ethel Nelson, Fern Grondin and Nora Barron.

Thursday was the last day for chemistry laboratory work this year. The work has proven practical. The last few lessons have been devoted to the useful practice of testing baking powder, making blue prints and brass arts and crafts jewelry.

M. H. in German, declining the large red apple. Der grosse rote apfel—Des grossen rotten apfel.

The Zoology class had a field trip Tuesday. They report angle worms as very scarce this year.

The classes have all started the review work for the last quarter. This makes us realize how near we are to the end of the year

Example of Alliteration:—Lloyd what is an alkaloid?"

Is it their essays that make the seniors look so pre-occupied these days, or is it the new commencement clothes that are under way?

The Bemidji seniors are to put on "A night off, for their class play this year.

Bemidji is also getting out its first high school annual this year.

Clyde Fitch's "Preversity of Geraldine" is the Fond du Lac. Wis., class play this year. One of the senior girls of Fond du Lac has been winning in declamatory contests around the neighboring cities. She expects to visit Washington, D. C., in the course of her tour.

Grateful For Help

Dear Editor of Dispatch:—

Kindly permit us through the columns of your paper to kindly thank those who in any way helped to make our entertainment the success it was. We wish to thank Mr. Fritz Koop and Mr. Harry Koop for their magnanimity in donating the use of their theatre, the Unique, for the evening, and also Miss Kathleen Graham, the pianist, and the entertainers for what they did so gratuitously. We are sure that the public generally will be glad to learn that we made a handsome sum which will be used faithfully by us in a good cause.

Sincerely yours,

Ladies of the Women s Relief Corp

The Verdict.

The lecture was over, and the gentleman who did the talking strained his ears as he followed the audience out of the hall to gather in, so far as he could, what sort of an impression he had made. As he drew near to the doorway two old gentlemen who were making their way out just ahead of him rendered a verdict.

"Well, Bankside," said one of them, "what did you think of it?"

"I've heard worse," said Bankside.

"Did you think it was at all illuminating?" asked the other.

"In an old fashioned way, yes," replied the venerable Bankside.

"I don't quite catch your point," said the questioner.

"Why, it was illuminating, but it struck me as having more gas than electricity about it," explained the critic.—Judge.

A Different View.

"She was very complimentary to me last night."

"In what way?"

"She called me a human comet."

"And you consider that a compliment?"

"Sure; means I'm a hustler."

"Not exactly. She told me yesterday that she had just learned that a comet is composed of millions of feet of gas."—Houston Post.
